Intro

Our idea is to create an all-in-one platform that supports the job-seeking journey. The application will provide a cohesive hub where users can manage their recruitment history, build custom CVs, read helpful articles, and stay organized and on top of their deadlines, through features like a calendar and notes. By integrating these tools, we aim to empower users, especially those struggling in today's competitive job market, to adequately plan and gain confidence.

The project was guided by a user story (demonstrated in our demo presentation) of an individual who, just like most of our team or our friends at some point, overwhelmed by disorganized applications and outdated resumes, was able to refine their job search and ultimately secure a job. Ultimately we hope for users to achieve this goal using our platform.

1. Business Requirements

The PlumJob application, as we decided to call it, must meet several business and technical requirements. The platform needs to support user account creation, enabling individuals to access and personalize their experience. Key features including recruitment history tracking, a CV builder, job-search-related articles, and tools like a calendar are crucial to offer real value and functionality.

Prospective monetization of the platform (to support its refinement and deployment) will be achieved through advertisements, ensuring financial sustainability. Long-term development goals include expanding content offerings such as additional CV templates or new articles to keep users engaged. From an operational standpoint, database security and reliable backup strategies are essential to protect user data and ensure service continuity.

Milestones:

- a working demo by June 10th, 2025,
- a fully functioning application by June 16th, 2025.

2. Threat and Risk Analysis

Our project faces two primary risks: financial viability and cybersecurity, even more as a web platform available from every place on with an Internet connection. The platform's sustainability depends on successfully acquiring and maintaining engagement of an initial user base, primarily through targeted advertising and promotional events. Once established, ad revenue must at minimum cover server and maintenance costs, otherwise the platform becomes a financial liability. Any spare revenue will cover the work of the development team and extra marketing.

Additionally, as an online service, the application is exposed to potential external threats and cyberattacks. To mitigate this, we must maintain compliance with up-to-date web security protocols, implement regular updates, and adopt best practices in data protection and encryption.

Context

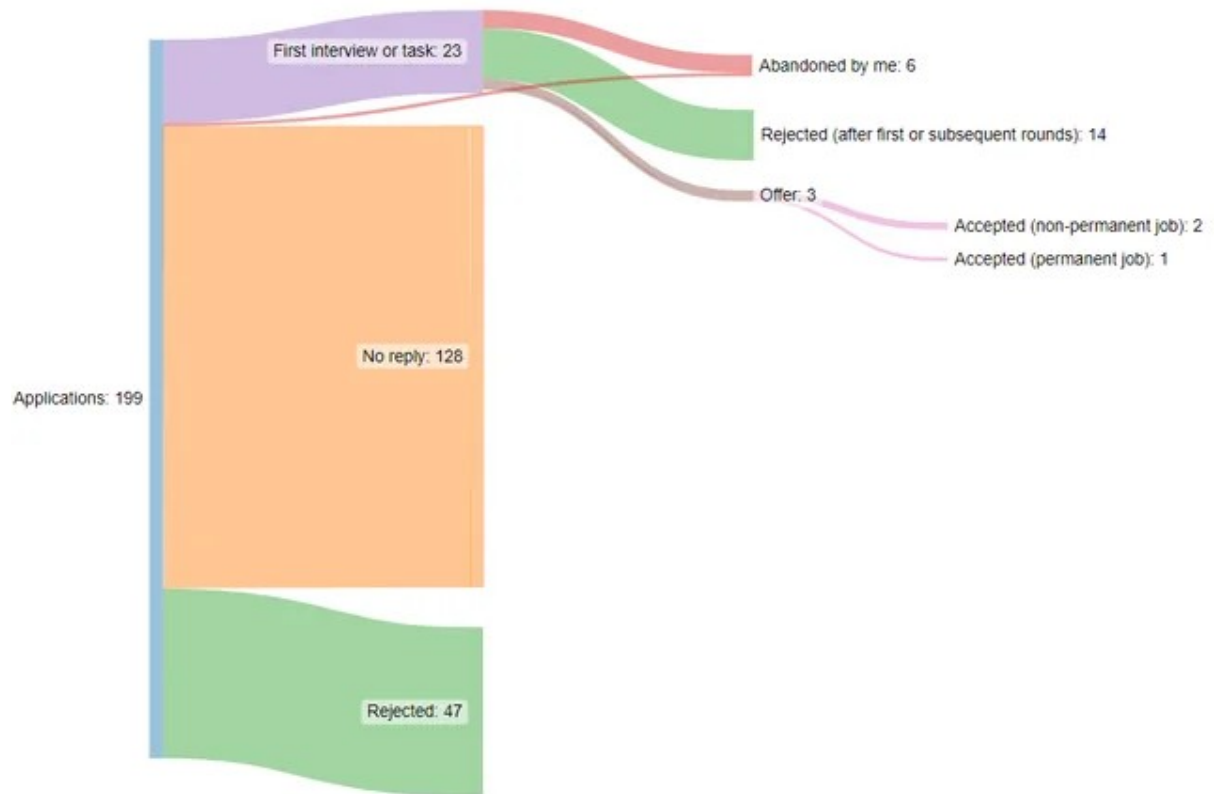

During research and through personal experience, we've come to realize that job hunting can be an exhausting and anxiety-filling process. Many users struggle with disorganization, i.e. losing track of applications, deadlines, or using outdated, ineffective resumes. This tends to increase frustration and cause to miss opportunities despite having the right skills. Our platform addresses this by combining said essential tools, all in one place.

Our target audience includes individuals actively seeking employment, especially those who feel overwhelmed, unsupported or lack necessary information to succeed during the recruitment processes. The application not only helps organize but also provides clarity through structure and access to helpful tips.

This particular need is reflected in our personal experiences and research sources including:
